

About

I am a web designer, internet consultant and host providing a personal and tailored service to all my clients at reasonable charges and rates.

I am not just a tech-head. I have a well rounded understanding of more than just the internet. I worked in senior management positions for several industries in sales, marketing and administration roles before deciding to earn my living as a web designer. I also have a wealth of experience in international trade and commerce which often comes in useful given the global nature of the net. All this means that my consulting service does not focus purely on technical matters ? I am able to understand the strengths, weakness, opportunities and threats to my business clients and advise on or provide tailored solutions to them.

I designed my first site back in 1996 when the internet was still in it's infancy. As the internet has grown, so have my skills, which means that my services are based on years of experience.

You can find out more about my services by visiting the Design, Consultancy and Hosting sections of this website, or view some examples of my designs in my portfolio. From time to time I also post articles of a technical nature in the Techy Stuff section of this site. If this type of thing appeals to you, I hope you will find some of the articles interesting and useful.
